Conservation Commission

The Conservation Commission invited Pat Macoul of Local Wildlife Photos to their October meeting to share her photos and observations of Salem's nesting osprey.

This is a success story. Since at least 2015, a pair of osprey were seen nesting on the top of a light pole on the edge of Rockingham Park. Due to construction last year, there was a need to remove that light pole. With the combined efforts of the Salem Conservation Commission, the NH Fish and Game, the new owners of the property, the construction team, and many more, the nest was saved and relocated. The light pole was taken down only after the osprey had migrated south for the winter, and the nest was moved to a great new platform in a better spot on the edge of the site. As was hoped, the osprey pair successfully found the new nest this year.

1. Female osprey in flight
2. Protective female and juvenile in nest
3. Female screaming at close-by crows
4. Parents with fish in nest
5. Juvenile flying with ease
6. Juvenile exercising wings in nest
7. Juvenile exercising wings for parents
8. Male osprey standing on light pole
